PLAN FOR DRYING FRUIT.

An Evaporator Takes the Place of Old Method

The old way of drying apples, peaches and other fruit in the sun is not always destrable on account of the worms and bugs getting into the dried product and also from the fact that much loss results from the uncertainty of the weather. Then the fruit is of better quality when dried in the evaporator. A few dollars' outlay and a little time spent in the dull season, when other farm work is not pressing, will be all that is necessary to construct an evaporator that is equal in all the essentials to one that would cod many times that amount.
